

THE NUMBERS OF GREYLAG AND PINK-FOOTED GESE

FOUND IN GREAT BRITAIN ON 28th MARCH, 1965

About 34,000 Greylag Geese Anser anser and 16,000 Pink-footed Geese Anser brachyrhynchos were found in Scotland and England on, or about, 28th March, 1965. The number of Greylags was large in relation to the population of about 43,000 found on 8th November, 1964, suggesting that winter losses had been light. In November 1964 there had been over 65,000 Pinkfeet; it seems likely that a substantial number had already emigrated by the date of the count.

The following table compares the numbers of geese found roosting in different counties with those found on 8th November, 1964 and on 15th March, 1964. The county totals are rounded to the nearest ten birds and the British total to the nearest thousand. Feral flocks of Greylags have been excluded. Entries in parentheses are less reliable than most. Minus signs indicate that the species has no regular haunt in a county.

Despite snowfalls in many areas a few days earlier, the weather on 27th-28th March was kinder to counters than in either of the previous attempts at a census in March. The cover of known haunts was good, an aerial survey being used to supplement ground searches in much of east and north Scotland. Yet the number of Pinkfeet found was substantially less than the 43,000-49,000 that would be expected to survive from a population of 65,000 in early November 1964 suffering normal winter losses. This is the third time that the March inventory of Pinkfeet has been low. In 1963 and 1964 the subsequent November counts and the proportion of young birds in autumn showed that the low March scores were not due to high mortality. It is certainly true that Pinkfeet are harder to find in March than in November, because they tend to be in smaller groups and to use unfamiliar and temporary roosting places, but this is also true of Greylags. It begins to look as if substantial numbers of Pinkfeet may leave the country in March, if not earlier, presumably to return to Iceland. I hope it will be possible to investigate this next winter, by looking for Pinkfeet in January or February as well as in November and March.

Acknowledgements. This report is due to the combined efforts of more than 130 observers, listed below. Rather a lot of them, especially those in England, saw few or no geese, but their negative results, though disappointing at the time, are an essential contribution to the success of the operation.
